

The Bloomfield Record.

The Vicissitudes of Western Missionary Life.

[Something over a year ago at a union prayer meeting of the two Presbyterian Churches in this place, there was present a "tall missionary" from Northern Michigan, who in a plain unvarnished way told of the difficulties and encouragements of his work. Those who were present expressed themselves as being very much pleased with his address. Believing that the following letter will interest many outside of the Westminster Sunday School (to whom addressed) they have been offered for publication:]

GREENVILLE, MICH., MAY, 1875.

DEAR TEACHERS AND SCHOLARS: Having been sick nearly all winter I started out on the 17th of March to make my first and last trip in the woods by sleighing. And if you would like I will give you a few incidents and some of the necessary preparation for such a journey. I will not ask you to witness the passing scene with a wife and family, for their tears and remembrance would move your sympathy, and I fear that you too, would say "don't risk your health in the woods this terrible cold weather and deep snow." But trying to put in the points of our morning lesson (Mark 4: 23, 24) I felt all to follow Christ, and to go to the very end of the way, giving up every convenience, pleasant days, such as we have not had before during the long winter, and returned home an "unhappily" sicker than when I started. It is true my lodgings were quite different from what I have at home. One night I slept in the garret of a log house, and have but few others in the woods where my head came close to the roof made of shingles, between which I would have had a delightful opportunity for studying. As I was not here to be for the cold wind blowing in my face, when I stopped by stuffing my handkerchief and mittens into the cracks over my head. Then covering my head with my shawl I slept like a "pig in the clover." It was in the evening when I reached this house and the children (four little girls) had gone to bed, but recognizing my voice they all got up and dressed while I was out taking care of the ponies, and little Nellie says, "I'll bet he's brought us something," and so he had. This brings me to the preparation for the journey. In the first place I always carry an ax, in case I should find a tree fallen across my track, to chop it out, or if too large to cut my way around it. Then when the snow is very deep (as in this case) I carry a shovel in case I meet a team and have to turn out in the deep snow, to shovel my ponies out. And on this occasion (as many others) I took a good supply of second hand clothing for the poor families. And another very important preparation is, to carry provisions for myself and team, in case I have to stay out all night, or find no place for dinner. Now if you can imagine a S. S. Missionary getting off a sick bed, putting five large trunks full of clothing, and one full of books and papers into his sleigh, a bag of corn and bundle of hay for his ponies, and a sackful full of dinner for himself, and starting into the wilderness bidding good-bye to all behind him, not knowing how, or when he will return, then you will have some idea of the Missionary work. And if you could go with him in all of his journeyings, you would see that nothing but the "love of Christ constrained him" as he goes into these new settlements, entirely divested of selfishness, "seeking not his own," building up no parties or sects, but in his humble way he preaches Christ in the homes, by the wells, or by the wayside. Keeping near the cross himself he draws all men toward him, harmonizes all difficulties, and is a living illustration of the "unity of the spirit in the bonds of peace." Thus he lays a Christian foundation in all of these new settlements in advance of, and preparatory for, any or all Christian demonstrations to build upon. Like the good Samaritan he stops out to ask these poor settlers what church or nation they belong to, but if he finds them, he says he belongs there, and he clothes them, seeking no distinction he visits and comforts them, and with the means which you put into his hands he is enabled to supply many of these families with all the religious reading, including Bibles and Testaments, they have, thus bringing you into very tender relation to them. Glorious relationship—to be a Samaritan offering to poor suffering humanity, and a co-worker with Christ.

But my time is up and I must not weary you, though I have only just started on this journey and every day has experienced for a volume. I would like to tell you how, and where I spent the Sabbath, show you how I clothed some of those poor families, and especially I should like to invite you all to take dinner with me from my big satchel on my way home, but I wouldn't like to tell you now what we shall have for dinner, nor where we shall spread our table, nor can I tell how many baskets full will be left. I only hope, if you come, you will be real hungry, then you will relish whatever is set before you, "asking no questions." If you would like to accept this invitation and take your chances, we will furnish the trip for our next letter, if some of you will write at once to Your Humble Missionary,

H. DENSMORE

The Sabbath.

The following is the protest against Sunday Excursion Trains, as adopted by the Presbytery of Newark, in session last week in this village:

The Presbytery of Newark do solemnly testify and protest against the desecration of the Sabbath by the running of special Railroad Excursion trains on that day.

We hold the Sabbath to be a sacred ordinance of God, which all the people are bound to reverence and obey; and whose proper observance is part of the "Righteousness" which "exalteth a nation." It is also one of God's best gifts to men. It has been given as a needful rest from toil, and a season of abstinence from enjoyments which either exact toll from others, or disturb their rest, or interfere with the spiritual refreshing which it was designed to furnish.

The Sun's Railroad Excursion violates these conditions and is a design. They contravene the law of God. They exact toll from a large number of persons employed on the trains and at several stations. They tempt others to engage in work in the driving of vehicles, the sale of various articles, the opening of exhibitions. They disturb communities with the noise of the trains and the movement of large bodies of people in the streets and at the depot. They lure from their homes, and from the beneficent influence of religious worship and education, great numbers of our population. They weaken reverence for God and religion, and lead to thoughtlessness, dissipation and immorality.

The Railroad Companies have no right thus to use their materials and power in opposition to the conscientious convictions of millions of their constituents; in violation of legal enactments; and to disregard of a wide-spread public opinion. They have no right thus to disregard God's ordinance and to inflict so serious a wound on the vital interests of our State and country.

We also bear our solemn testimony against growing tendency to make selfish calculations out of the public mind of traveling on that day, whether by railroad or steamboat, or other conveyance, for purposes of festivity, or for the pretext for relaxation, for the working community or assembly for religious worship and instruction. Such Sunday excursions are not only a violation of God's Law, and destructive of a sacred institution of priceless value, but are also subversive of the rights and interests of the community, and at variance with sound political economy. Experience testifies that the pleasure thus obtained by workingmen is purchased at the sacrifice of higher good; that the ultimate rejoicing in due to masses thus brought together is at least of very questionable value; and that in the end, such use of the Sabbath tends to the weakening of social virtue and the undermining of our national strength, prosperity and happiness.

We protest also, and emphatically, against turning the Centennial celebration of our Nation's birth—which will attract the attention of the world, and be, in some measure, a grand judgment of free institutions, and which ought to be marked with dignity and illustrated with the exhibition of the highest civic and social virtues into an occasion for violating the Law of God, and throwing contempt upon an institution whose religious observance has been one of the marked features of our national history, and has undoubtedly contributed largely to our prosperity; an institution evidently so dear to the God of Nations, to whose favor we people are so much indebted. Let not the nations of the earth who have heard of the beneficent of the American Sabbath, and its influence on our national character, be called together to witness great corporations and masses of our people faithful to the past, treating it with desecration and contempt. Let not that which we hope to contemplate with just national pride be made a dishonor and an exposure of us to disaster, by acts of ingratitude and insult to God.

Therefore, in the interests of our beloved country, and in the name of God, we do earnestly protest against all such Sabbath desecration, and do bear our solemn testimony in defense of the sacred day, which we have inherited from our fathers, and which they reverently transmitted to us as a primal institution of God.

News Notes.

The old mansion on the Jersey coast, within sight of Sandy Hook, known as the "Water Witch" House, was destroyed by fire last Sunday. With this house are associated many interesting historical reminiscences, some of which are mentioned in Fenimore Cooper's novel of the "Water Witch." The site was originally purchased by Hartshorne from the Indians, twenty years afterward to be sold to Samuel Woodward. Subsequently the old house came into the possession of a bachelor named Stewart, who long lived there in utter seclusion. Upon his death the property passed to the hands of C. K. Jones, formerly Sheriff of the County, who opened the establishment as a summer boarding house, for which purpose it was used over twenty-two years.

After the services at the Broad street M. E. church, Chambersburg, near Trenton, recently, the sexton, in putting out the lamps, blew down one of the chimneys, where the lamp exploded, scattering the burning oil over the floor and seats. Several persons who were in the church beat the fire out with their coats, and thereby saved the building from destruction. One of the persons—a young man—had his hand quite severely burned.

The trial of Siney and Parks, indicted for participating in the riots in the coal region in Pennsylvania, last summer, resulted, last week, in a verdict by the jury acquitting Siney, but convicting Parks of riot and conspiracy. Parks was sentenced to hard labor for one year, and to pay a fine of $1 and the costs of the trial, which are estimated at $1,500.

Recently while a party of ladies and gentlemen were enjoying a sail on the Mibwah, in Romapo, a huge water snake fell from the branches of an overhanging tree and landed in the boat. There was wild excitement there for a few minutes.

On Tuesday Afternoon a young man jumped or fell from the top of the Washington monument in Baltimore, a distance of 180 feet, and was crushed to a shapeless mass. Nothing was found about his person indicating his name. He was genteelly clad. A note was found in a pocket of his clothing which read: "Now, Miss Cobb, I leave thee in these words, hoping to hear from you." Then followed the first four lines of Byron's "Fare thee well."

Messrs. Moody and Sankey, the evangelists, were in Brooklyn on the 7th inst., and had a long consultation with a large number of the Brooklyn clergy, and it was finally decided by the evangelists that they would begin their work on Sunday, Oct. 31, at the Rink Building, which will seat between 7,000 and 8,000 people, a subscription paper was started and $1,600 pledged at once.
